8 Brigadiers Take Final Salutes Today

Eight brigadier generals with a total of almost 344 years' Army service will retire at public ceremonies at 4 p. m. today on the Fort Myer parade grounds.

As the Army Band plays a musical farewell to military service, the following brigadier generals will take their last salute:

- William J. Bradley, 30 years' service, who during World War II commanded the Eighth Cavalry Regiment and later headed the Fortieth Infantry Division in Korea.

- Carter W. Clarke, 38 years' service, who rose from an enlisted man in the Kentucky National Guard to command the Army Security Agency. Most recently he has been with the Central Intelligence Agency.

- Elton F. Hammond, 36 years' service, who has been chief signal officer of the Army forces in Tokyo, and who holds the Distinguished Service Medal and the Legion of Merit.

- James L. Harbaugh, Jr., 36 years' service, who has served as Assistant Judge Advocate General for Military Justice. He holds the French Croix de Guerre and the Order of British Empire.

- John G. Hill, 30 years' service, whose decorations include the Distinguished Service Medal and the Legion of Merit. He has been Assistant Division Commander of the Fortieth Infantry Division in Korea.

- Reginald P. Layman, 32 years' service, has been commanding general of the Signal Corps Training Center, San Luis Obispo, Calif. He holds the Legion of Merit.

- Richard P. Ovenshire, 35 years' service, has served as chief of the Infantry Branch, Career Management Division, of the Adjutant General's office in Washington. He won the Silver Star medal.

- Frank Canim, more than 26 years' service, was last assigned in Lisbon, Portugal, as chief of the Military Assistance Advisory Group. He has been awarded the Legion of Merit and the French Legion of Honor.
